“We tend to experience more intense emotions about future events than those in the past. This is because, on the whole, we have an expectation that future events will make us feel more emotional than ones that have passed. On top of this, we are also more likely to talk about how excited we are about something we have planned compared to something we have already done.”

wait

It seems like waiting has been a luxurious thing to people nowadays. Well, I kind of know the reason behind this. Items can be bought, things can be searched immediately with just a click.

*good things don't come

I can't agree more about this saying. This thing about waiting for something to happen. They say, without you making a move, nothing will ever happen. Good things don't go to those who wait, it goes to those who act now.

Ironically, acting now is actually a different kind of 'waiting'. It could be you creating something and the process of 'creating' itself is simply a different way of waiting because you are 'waiting' (creating) an outcome.

Either we wait or not, they both require patience. The patience of waiting for something or the patience of creating something. Having patience means you can remain calm, even when you've been waiting forever or dealing with something painstakingly slow or trying to make something work and it is just incredibly hard.

Fun fact about being Patience, it is actually an important tool for overcoming frustration. Patience allows us to suspend judgment long enough to make informed decisions, thus paving the path to a happy and peaceful life.

It all depends on us. Some people might not have a high expectation of something and some people might. This fully effects from every individual's lives. What we experienced throughout our lives. It is all different because we are all individuals.

Though the plan doesn't always go the way we wanted, we should treat every moment as precious as it is.
